Manager's Comments

The JSE All Share Index launched into 2017 with a very strong return of 4.3% in January. This number is however misleading, as the market was carried by the resource sector (up 10.4%) and Naspers (up 6.14%). The rest of the market struggled with ZAR hedges and the financial sector in particular, posting negative returns. In the face of this dispersion the fund returned a satisfactory performance, returning 0.5%.

Significant contributors to returns stemmed from our long-held position in Naspers, our long positions in the resource sector and our short positions in the South African Industrial space. We continue to see significant value in Naspers. Most of its underlying operations continue to perform well and we expect to see further value enhancing transactions in its various operations. Strong returns were also achieved from our long positions in Anglo American and African Rainbow Minerals. Although we continue to struggle to justify the prevailing prices of the bulk commodities, the cash flow being generated by the commodity companies in the current environment is difficult to ignore. We will thus remain long of the space, but are very aware of the risks associated with it and will react swiftly if the conditions change.

Losses were suffered in our long positions in Steinhoff International and Curro Holdings. Steinhoff continued to underperform after the announcement that they intend to merge their African operations with Shoprite. We continue to see value in Steinhoff. In our view, the current underperformance is completely driven by sentiment and is ignoring the strong fundamental growth story that Steinhoff presents. Our long-held position in Curro Holdings also contributed to losses in January. We continue to see the rise of private education in South Africa as a key thematic play in our portfolio.

The market continues to see the glass half full since the election of Donald Trump as the US president. With some very lacklustre numbers being reported by many South African companies the market continues to be willing to look through the current numbers and believe that the earnings profile will improve in the near future. Although we are of the view that the SA economy has bottomed, we believe that the market is being a little too bullish on the growth of a few companies. With the valuations of many South African companies having converged through 2016, we continue to see significant opportunity to generate alpha over the coming 12 to 18 months.
